The disability community confronts disaster

"Even with the best warning notification systems and strategic plans, people with disabilities are disproportionately impacted during natural disasters."

An article with perspectives on preparedness and response, plus ways to support people dealing with the aftermath of the California wildfires, written by Alice Wong, is here.

Creative exploration of disability and healing

The Journal of Humanities in Rehabilitation encourages dialogue among rehabilitation professionals, patients and their families to gain a greater understanding of the human experience of disability — through art, literature and narrative.

Inspiring to peruse and a great online resource... we especially resonated with the poem, "See Me," by Amanda LaLonde, PT, DPT, GCS.

Submissions are open and may take many forms, including a perspectives piece, personal narrative, poetry, video or photo essay, book review, or an original research article. Learn more here.
