"You have two choices when life gets hard, ride it out and keep pushing, or let it knock you down and pass you by."

Cody Woolums telling it like it is – Ride on!

Things that go bump in the night abound at this time of the year... but hopefully, you feel secure and confident about your seating and its skin protection abilities.

A properly selected and fitted Ride cushion can help manage heat and moisture, help reduce deep tissue deformation at high risk areas, and provide a stable base of support for improved sitting performance. Ride cushions work by off-loading high risk bony prominences, while safely supporting those parts of the body that can tolerate contact. This strategy aids in improved postural control, mobility and skin care – with potential results well beyond those of traditional wheelchair cushions.

"Overcoming fears one at a time..."

Muniba Mazari, lovingly referred to as the Iron Lady of Pakistan, talks about how her life changed after a car accident left her without the use of her legs and how this has changed her perspective on life.

"I decided that I'm going to live life for myself... I am just going to take this moment and I will make it perfect for myself, that I'm going to fight my fears."

In her powerful speech, she expresses how important it is to accept yourself in order for the rest of the world to recognize you.

Fun Finds...

The obstacles that drive wheelchair users crazy... Architect Erick Mikiten, himself a wheelchair rider, shares some potential modifications that would make navigating spaces much easier for those with disabilities in Dwell magazine.

How boredom may lead to your most brilliant ideas... the connection between spacing out and creativity... Watch the TED talk here.
